The State of AEG and A Not So Routine Hydrogeologic Study

An update on all things AEG with some space for member Q&A. Then a technical talk discussing what appeared to be a routine site investigation from the outset, but once the data started coming in things were not what they seemed. Is it possible to blame COVID for numerous complications? Especially, when additional research was needed to potentially avoid a major construction redesign; and the results inspire some big questions.

Speaker Bio:

Maddie German works full time as an environmental geologist outside of Atlanta, Georgia for Atlantic Coast Consulting. She primarily focuses on site assessment work, groundwater and subsurface investigations. She was formerly the Carolina's Chapter chair and has served on several AEG committees. When not working, she spends her time slowly walking her 2 senior dogs or riding the many mountain bike trails in the Georgia foothills.
